

Home » Politics » This Article

SANDAG Approves $204 Billion, 35-Year Transportation Plan

POSTED BY CHRIS JENNEWEIN ON OCTOBER 9, 2015 IN POLITICS | 409 VIEWS | LEAVE A RESPONSE

Share This Article:

Rendering of the double express lanes planned for Interstate 5. Courtesy SANDAG

Updated at 3:21 p.m. on Oct. 9, 2015

A plan that sets up a framework for future transportation projects around the region for the next 35 years was approved Friday by the San Diego Association of Governments.

The $204 billion plan was opposed by environmentalists and public transit advocates, who contend that the plan called "San Diego Forward" doesn't go far enough in prioritizing mass transportation.

Supporters said the plan put together by the regional planning agency sets aside 75 percent of funding in the first five years to implement transit, bicycling and walking strategies.

"Throughout the process, SANDAG has been required to make a lot of tradeoffs, and the result, I believe, is a balanced plan," said San Diego Councilwoman Lorie Zapf. "There's investments in transit, and bikes, in pedestrian walkways, and express lanes, and environmental mitigation and much more."

Councilman Todd Gloria said he would like to see a higher priority to public transit, but

GET TIMES OF SAN DIEGO BY EMAIL

Our free newsletter is delivered at 8 a.m. daily.

Email Address

SUBSCRIBE

described the plan as an improvement over previous versions.

The Sprinter in North County would be improved by adding a second track. Courtesy SANDAG

"Because this plan dedicates, for the foreseeable future, three-fourths of the funds available to transit, because it's a marked improvement over the last plan that only gave half the money to public transit, and because this plan all of our state requirements when it comes to greenhouse gas emissions, I will support this plan," Gloria said.

According to SANDAG, the plan was put together with the expectation that 1 million more people would call San Diego County home, and there would be an additional half-million jobs and 300,000 extra houses.

Among other things, the agency said the plan will commit more than 50 percent of its overall investment to transit, including five new trolley lines, 32 new Rapid bus routes lines, and significant increases in transit frequencies. The plan would also result in an added 160 miles of freeway car pool lanes and 275 miles of bikeways. The Environmental Health Coalition contended the plan is "freeway-centric," and ignored years of community requests for prioritized improvements to transit, biking and walking infrastructure.

The EHC also believes the plan will exacerbate air pollution, health and asthma problems in low-income communities south of Interstate 8, and prevent the city of San Diego from meeting the goals of its climate action plan.

After the vote, San Diego Councilman David Alvarez said the plan was not balanced for all of San Diego.

"In this plan, major traffic relief and improvements to public transportation in the South Bay and in much of the city of San Diego are pushed decades into the future," Alvarez said.

"If you are stuck in traffic on the I-805 in Chula Vista, this plan says you have to wait years for a reliable alternative," Alvarez said. "If your commute to downtown on the Blue or Orange lines simply takes too long, this plan says you have to wait 20 years for major improvements."

The SANDAG directors, made up of elected officials with the county and its 18 cities, called the plan a compromise designed to meet the varying needs of its members.

Supervisor Ron Roberts, who sits on the boards of the Metropolitan Transit System and California Air Resources Board, urged approval of the plan. He called it a gateway to the sort of projects the plan's opponents want.

— City News Service

>> Subscribe to Times of San Diego's free daily email newsletter! Click here

Follow Us:

POSTED IN POLITICS | TAGGED ENVIRONMENTAL HEALTH COALITION, HIGHWAYS, JACK DALE, MASS TRANSIT, PLANNING, SANDAG

A promotional poster for a Tony Robbins Live event. The background is a vibrant green with a silhouette of Tony Robbins on stage, arms raised. The text is white and yellow. At the top, it says "TONY ROBBINS LIVE". Below that, in large letters, "BE. EMPOWERED". In the center, "SAVE 25% ON TICKETS". Below that, "UNLEASH THE POWER WITHIN PALM BEACH | MARCH 10-13, 20". At the bottom, a white button with "GET TICKETS" and "LIMITED TIME OFFER" below it.

MOST POPULAR TODAY

-  3 Corrections Officers Injured at Donovan Prison 5,117 views
-  Sea Lion Found Sleeping in La Jolla's Iconic Marine Room 742 views
-  Defense Chief: Conflict With Putin's Russia an Issue to 'Worry About' 444 views
-  Girl, 17, Raped Under Anesthetic? Dental Assistant Stands Accused 405 views
-  Monster Jam Returns to Petco Park 28 Massive Trucks 310 views